

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

There are “little boxes” and “big boxes” turned out by hundreds of CAD designers, and whether they be big or small they all tend to sameness.

Why? Because they have no unique design characteristics. A home, by contrast is unique; it is not to be confused with the house next door or the one around the corner. Any house without a unique design characteristic is visually (and most likely, functionally) deficient and it shows.

Every house either adds to urban sprawl or it makes its own unique statement, either well or badly.

Dave Lawrence has a special gift in house design – the capacity to visualize a unique design feature that is both functional and visually synergetic with the rest of the structure.

His designs work, because they reflect the lifestyle choices of the property’s owners. They’re environmentally efficient also.
